Water Quality Monitoring within Muskingum Watershed Conservancy District

Fernanda Craig, Water Quality Coordinator, Muskingum Watershed Conservancy District
fcraig@mwcd.org

The Muskingum Watershed flows through all or part of 27 counties, draining a total of 8,051 square miles, and covering about 20% of the state. Created in 1933, the Muskingum Watershed Conservancy District (MWCD), a political subdivision of the State of Ohio, has been intentionally involved in water quality monitoring since 1986. The first monitoring partnership was taken place with USACE, initially focusing on the Huntington District. Since then, the MWCD has been involved in many direct and indirect efforts to monitor the Muskingum Watershed through partnerships on nearly every level of government, in addition to local non-governmental organizations. Water Quality Monitoring, among other benefits, assists in the detection of point and non-point source pollution, aids in the process of informed decision making, in pursuit of environmental health improvement, ultimately promoting sustainability. Understanding the importance of a long-term monitoring program, the MWCD aims to advance its effort to monitor our watershed by strengthening its partnerships, refining its monitoring methods, and preparing itself for future challenges.
